Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .I should be seeking a professorship in Latin or Greek. He was kind and patient enough to read the sixty-four-page work, and to write me a letter from the University of Tennessee, of date October 15, 1890. As expressive of some of his educational views and because of some sidelights thrown on his fine character, it is worthy of quotation: Reprinted by permission from the Sentinel. I gratefully acknowledge the receipt of the treatise, which I have read with interest and a full appreciation of the errors it combats and a sympathy with your effort to remove some of the obstacles to higher education. You are of course aware that the tide of affairs sweeps the same direction now and that broken-down ministers are no longer considered the most eligible college presidents, nor alphabetical appendages the best test of scholarship. It seems to me what is most needed now is a clear and frank recognition of the duties rightly belonging to different grades of educational institutions. Our universities, colleges, and academies are inextricably tangled and each is trying to do the others work. If we could get back to the simplicity of the Jeffersonian theory--primary school, academy and university, I think we would be on the proper basis, for the university of today would supply opportunities for special work. I shall take pleasure in connecting your name with any vacancy in Latin or Greek of which I may learn, and will communicate with you. Now may...
